Rev. Villiers Tells Of Convention Held
Episcopal Churches

Rev. J. Charles Villiers, who returned last week from the mainland where he attended a general convention of the Episcopal church in Portland, today gave a comprehensive outline of the aims and accomplishments of the gathering. In part he said: "It was conceded by all familiar with past general conventions of the Episcopal church, that the convention at Portland was far in advance, perhaps in every respect, of any previous convention, especially as to the number attending; the hospitality shown by the entertaining city, and in what was accomplished legislatively and in other ways. At the convention in Detroit, three years ago, the attendance of delegates and visitors inclusive was 2500. In Portland, there was an attendance in excess of 4000.

Convention Welcomed

"In the great gathering held in the auditorium, where all of the main meetings and many of the smaller ones were held—a gathering of more than 5000 people—the governor of the state and the mayor of Portland both said that the convention had brought religious and moral stimulus to the state as well as to Portland. This occurred at a meeting held under the auspices of the 'Royal Rosarians' and was for the twofold purpose of showing Oregon's interest in the convention and the observation of 'Rose Night'.

"During his talk, Mayor Baker said: 'Portland has welcomed many visitors. It has entertained many members of the nobility. We have had many great conventions in our city. But this general convention of the Episcopal church surpasses all such occasions in importance.'

"The hospitality of the Portland people should be spoken of in superlative terms. Automobile rides, varying in extent from 50 to a 100 miles, through a most beautiful and delightful country, of mountain, valley, and river, were provided without cost to upwards of 3000 visitors. One thousand people sat down at table, at one time each day of the convention, to a good, wholesome luncheon, provided free, by Portland's hospitality, in an airy, well lighted room. These were but the 'high spots' in Portland's hospitality.

Impressive Sermon Given

"The convention opened with a service religious in its character, in which a sermon was preached by Bishop Lines, of Newark, N. J. It was a great pronouncement, and profoundly impressed the congregation. It dealt with a world in revolt against the old and existing order, and pressed home to the hearts of men the important truth that the Church cannot countenance selfishness or iniquity in capital or labor; in politics; in the economic system, or in the social programme. Nor must the Church lose its interest, nor forget its obligation in the Master's name, for the multitude in the hard places of life. It was a sermon in which was fully recognized that the fundamental of life is religion, and that the solvent of present day problems must be sought in the atmosphere of religion.

"When the convention organized for business, it was found that the House of Bishops was represented by the presence of 118 bishops, the House of Deputies by 302 clerical, and 196 lay deputies. It is needless, perhaps, to say that the two houses sit separately, and that no action by either house is effective, as a law, or custom of the Church, until it has been concurred in by both houses. Such usage is not without its benefits. It can be made, and often is made, the safety valve against hasty and immature legislation. I cannot, of course, speak for what took place in the House of Bishops. But I can say for the House of Deputies that while in discussion there was much difference of opinion expressed, and while men spoke out from feelings of deep conviction, at no time was there manifested party spirit, or bigotry, and when defeat came to cherished ideas, it was accepted in good part.

Important Questions

"It would be impossible to outline or even make briefest reference to all the questions brought under consideration. Many of them were of vital interest only to adherents of the Episcopal branch of the Church Catholic. But some were of more general interest, affecting all members of the universal church, and those also who do not acknowledge any church allegiance. These questions were, in the main, questions relating to present day, widespread, disregard of law, mob violence, laxity in manners and morals, and kindred subjects.

"One subject of more than ordinary moment, was the narcotic evil. It was seriously stated that the opium menace is, today, far greater than the alcoholic menace was in its pluriest days. Such statements, unless one is in actual possession of incontrovertible evidence to support them, were better not made. But evidence does not seem to be lacking to show that in quite recent years, whatever the cause, the use of morphine, cocaine, and opium, has greatly increased in the United States. A committee was appointed to present this matter to the secretary of state, a committee, as I recall, which is to deal with other matters also, of social service and welfare. There was an important report from a commission on: 'The Home and Family,' a part of which report severely condemned the divorce evil, birth control and the lack of Christian training of children. The General Convention of the Episcopal Church, in 1922, was a great convention, devoid of eccentricities, broad of vision, human in sympathies, and constructive in legislation.
